

David Weatherby, MD
Nominee for PARA Calgary and Southern Alberta
Representative (CSAR)

PGY-2, Orthopedic Surgery
University of Calgary

Residency is hard. Surgical residency is hard. We have a great school and my significant time off service has reinforced that Calgary has tremendous programs, with great residents and great preceptors. However, in the near future, things will change. Decisions will be made that will affect us all. To navigate what lay ahead, a surgical point of view is an asset, and experience is required. I sat on the executive committee of my undergraduate degree, as well as my medical school society. I consider myself very fortunate -- never did I think I'd end up at an institution for orthopedic surgery as highly regarded as Calgary; but here I am, and I have never looked back. I feel strongly that my residency experiences to date, my personality and my willingness to be involved make me an excellent candidate for this position.

Biography:

I was born and raised just outside of Halifax, Nova Scotia. As such, I should be able to recall some exciting east coast story about having grown up on a sailboat, or meeting the Rankin Family, but I just can't. I had a regular upbringing playing soccer, rugby, and working as a bartender. My undergrad degrees in neuroscience and medicine both came from Dalhousie University. I love Halifax, but knew that it was time for a change. So I piled my better half and our spoiled-rotten Labrador retriever in the back of the Jeep and drove across the country.
